Journal by Rose Wilder Lane and Helen Dore Boylston

I loved Laura Ingalls Wilder's book and I loved Sue Barton nursing student books(I bame a nurse because of them) s and I loved this book when I got it from the library long ago.I was so delighted to ind it again on . Laura's daughter, Ruth Wilder Lane and HelenDore Boyleston take an old car, named Zenobia into Albania and the experiences they had.Helen is a great humerous writer, the whole book was fun!

This is a charming set of epistles from Rose and Helen to Rose's parents - Almanzo and Laura Ingalls Wilder. Rose is a witty writer, humorously describing her travels from Paris to Albania in a Model-T Ford in the 1920's. Having lived in Europe, too, I found myself laughing at their mishaps and adventures - not too much has changed in Europe during the 90 years since these letters were written. A must-read for fans of Laura and Rose.

Thank you very much.

I admit to a bias. Helen Dore Boylston was a cousin of my grandfather's and I've been feeling terribly cheated since I read this book because I never met her. The story is remarkable. Two young women decide to drive from Albania to Paris. Their adventures are not, perhaps, quite as colorful as one might hope, but their daring and imagination in deciding upon such an voyage make you realize that Laura Ingalls Wilder really raised one heck of a brave and free daughter. I'd recommend it to anyone who's read the Little House Books or any of Helen Dore Boylston's books about Sue Barton.

Rose Wilder Lane- Laura Ingalls Wilder's daughter- and Helen Dore Boyleston- author of the Sue Barton - were friends and traveled by car from Paris to Albania during the 1920's. This book is basically excerpts from their diaries and provides some wonderful insight into their lives and is great just because it is surprising in the way that people you never imagined were connected are.
