The description is accurate - 10 medium stands (cover 1 square), 5 large stands (covers 2x2) and 2 huge stands (covers 3x3). For scale, a player-character or a "standard" monster fits on a medium and a horse takes a large. They fit the Paizo pawns perfectly and it's really nice to have extra because the regular kits don't come with nearly enough. If you're going to make your own pawns (perhaps with different artwork), these stands will accommodate standard corrugated cardboard. What I didn't realize when I bought this was that I need many more mediums and only a few of the other sizes. Even a moderate party of characters will use up most of the bases, leaving not nearly enough for the horde of goblins that was supposed to attack. I suppose I should just buy some extra packs but I'd still rather they sold a pack of mediums-only so we could extend out the sizes we really need. (If I ever do need multiple huges, I can always hold the image up by clipping on multiple smaller stands.)

I run a Dungeons and Dragons 5th edition game, and the Pathfinder pawns work well for our villains, monsters, and extra characters/NPC's. These bases hold the pawns upright, like paper doll stands.  If you are a dungeonmaster or gamemaster and run roleplaying games, the Pathfinder pawn assortments sold here on and at game stores, are great, but you can usually use more stands. This product of only the stands, is supplant to any of the other boxes. (The pawns come with only a few stands generally, in some cases they come with none).

I am running a Skull and Shackles Adventure Path for some friends. A friend sent me the pawn set for the campaign as a gift, but it didn't come with any bases. Thus why I purchased this. There's a good selection of bases in this. I would have preferred more medium bases, since most of the PC's don't have their own mini. The amount that they provide runs low kind quickly if you're running larger battles.

exactly as shown, perfect for the their pawns, and custom inserts, definitely helps out since some of the pawn box sets dont carry the large bases. but now that i know i can get these i'll be buying pack probably with each box set, makes it fun for the players when you can throw down a couple dozen monsters, look them dead in the eye and say, "So, what do you want to do?"

Not much to say here. These hold up your pawns. The bestiary and the beginner box don't come with enough pawns if you are running big battles. This helps. You can also make your own pawns pretty easily with cardboard and printed images or just own drawings, then use these.

Great for Pathfinder Pawns. The slot is a fixed width, so it won't take standard cardboard cutouts, but WILL take my homemade Pawns that I print on full sized (8.5 x 11) sheets and glue onto crafting foam sheets. It works great.

Awesome product, it is nice that they give you the chance to buy some extra bases for those epic battles.

Since I did not have the base set of Monster Pawns and only had the various additions I had to purchase the bases. The easiest way to do this was to buy the official pathfinder bases to ensure the pawns fit as they are quite thick. They come in different sizes for the different sized pawns and worked perfectly.
