This winner of the Parents Magazine "Best Book of the Year" award is a simple counting book that celebrates Native American culture--and rabbits, of course. Each of Sylvia Long's detailed, painterly double-page illustrations has an old-fashioned quality that gives the book the feel of classic children's literature from the turn of the century. The accompanying text is a simple, rhythmic series of rhyming couplets. "Three busy messengers sending out the news" has three rabbits using one of their blankets to send smoke signals across a grassy river valley; "Four clever trackers looking for some clues" shows intrepid little hunters with bows and arrows examining the enormous paw-print of a bear. After "Ten sleepy weavers knowing day is done," an extra panel shows one rabbit hunched over a campfire while the other nine sleep soundly. A cut above the mass of counting books. (Baby to age 4) --Richard Farr

"There is a great deal of information and entertainment packed into this unusual counting book," said PW about this clever introduction to Native American culture. Ages 4-8. Copyright 1995 Reed Business Information, Inc. --This text refers to the Paperback edition.

Great book for counting and patterning lessons. My toddler loves the simple words and colorful illustrations.

All went well.

This is an adorable book that will inspire your child's imagination and curiosity while learning about Indian culture and simply counting to 10.

Fantastic and lovely. A must have.

One of my favorite kids' books!

Quite possibly the prettiest children's book I've ever seen. One thing I don't understand about some of the negative reviews is the people saying that she "made all Native Americans the same." As a Native American, the rabbits VERY CLEARLY represent different tribes, some the southwest to the plains to the pacific northwest. I just flat out don't understand the objections. My kiddo loves counting the rabbits and describing what is happening on each page.

One of the cutest books I've seen yet. My Grandbaby loves it. Thank you :)

In my Kindergarten classroom.
